Slight Drop Reported In County TB Cases

K. H. SUTHERLAND, M. D. County Health Officer
In this country during the early 1950s, many health officials and private physicians who were concerned with the control of tuberculosis seemed to believe the disease had been conquered.
But, in the past several years, national figures on tuberculosis occurrence have revealed what was already known to tuberculosis specialists; that the problem of eradication of tuberculosis is far more difficult than that of control.
Though it is true that there were 84,304 new active cases of tuberculosis in the United States in 1953, compared with 53,726 reported in 1961, there is strong evidence that the decline has not only slowed down but may have stopped. Indeed the decline in the case rate per 100,000 population has become markedly less each year since 1957.

NATIONALLY, the decline in the number of new active cases in 1962 was a nonsignificant 2.4 per cent. In Los Angeles County, however, strongly supported control programs by all health departments and tuberculosis associations successfully countered the general U.S. trend, and a 14 per cent decline for this same period was recorded.
Until recently, eradication of the disease has seemed an impossibility. The reason for this has been the immensity of the existing reservoir of mature individuals who, at some time in their lives, were infected with the bacillus that causes tuberculosis. The U. S. Public Health Service places this figure for persons 40 years of age and older at about 32 million.

TUBERCULOSIS IS unique in the nature of its reservoir. Most of these 32 million infected persons were exposed to the germs, developed the infection, and their bodies healed the lesions without any awareness on the part of the individuals.
In these cases, the body arrested the progress of the infection by building a capsule around these sites of the invasion in the lungs, thus imprisoning the bacilli on a more or less permanent basis. There is always the possibility, however, that the capsules may break down after many years, and the hibernating bacilli thereby released to create an active case of tuberculosis.
The majority of cases of tuberculosis today are not the result of recent infections, but rather the result of breakdowns into active disease of infections that occurred in past years.

PROFESSIONAL workers from health departments, tuberculosis associations, schools, and a number of other interested agencies in Los Angeles County are emphasizing on a plan of attack on tuberculosis that may eventually prove to be a major force in the ultimate eradication of the disease.

The plan, which was inaugurated in 1961, is one in which eighth grade students in 20 per cent of school districts with eighth grade classes will be tuberculin tested each year over a five-year period until 100 per cent of the eighth grade classes have been done. A similar five-year program will follow the completion of the first.

It is hoped that these two five-year programs will establish a picture of the long range trends in infection levels and provide a measure of the success of existing efforts in tuberculosis control. The data collected will also help spot the communities where special emphasis will be required.

ERADICATION IS still a long way from achievement, but on the basis of the steps that have already provided greater and greater control of tuberculosis, professional health workers are now starting to think and plan with the goal of eradication of the disease in mind. Some day, perhaps, the dream will become a reality.

A pamphlet in which there is considerable information on the disease will be mailed to anyone who sends a request to the Division of Health Education, Los Angeles County Health Department, 241 N. Figueroa St., Los Angeles 12.
